Remember when you were a J-pop virgin? What was the first Jpop song you ever heard, where'd you hear it, and who sung it?

My first Jpop was Depend on You, by Ayumi Hamasaki. I first heard it on the game, Thousand Arms.

Mmm, it was a long time ago. I'm pretty sure it was the Japanese Pokémon rap, though it could have been DAN DAN, the opening of DragonballGT (I dunno...my friend had them and he played them for me). I was like sitting there in awe and thinking "Damn...I wanna learn Japanese!"

I've never really heard anything from a Japanese artist, only anime songs, but another friend of mine let me borrow Ayumi Hamasaki's third CD (she's dressed like a leopard???) and I'm listening to it right now. It's pretty good.

Densetsu. But I don't really consider anime songs as j-pop. I put them in a class by themselves.

So, my true first song would be Pink Spider by Hide. Shame on you if you love j-pop or visual and you don't know Hide!

Um... have no clue. ^^; The first popular Japanese music I heard was when I was a little kid way back in the 80s. The artist was Misora Hibari, a very famous Japanese enka singer. As for first animation series music, it was the opening theme to Dragon Ball: Mysterious Adventure. I think that was when I was around... 6 or 7 years old when I was visiting relatives overseas.

Hm...My first time ever laying ears on a Japanese song was probably "Tonight there's a Hurricane" from BubbleGum Crisis 2030 (the old one, boys and girls) when I was 7 or so. Then various Sailor Moon songs from my "Best Song Collection" CD my mom got me for X-mas my first year in high school (big gap...)

But honest to goodness J-Pop? Hm...I think it was either Utada Hikaru's "Eternally" or one of the many Every Little Thing songs (all their songs sound the same to me now...) n.n who would have thought I'd be where I am today...

My first JPop song (I guess it would be) was Fragrance by Gackt off of his Moon album. It was in English and I didn't know what to think of it. I downloaded a wallpaper of him and Squall from Final Fantasy VIII and fell in love with him and his white hair. I wanted to find out more about him so I typed in a search on WinMX and that's how I came across that song. Sadly, I deleted the copy almost three years ago (as soon as I got it) because I thought I had the wrong person. It's funny now I love Fragrance and I can't find the version that he sung in English again.

I know I heard tons of J-rock and J-pop songs as a kid when I was addicted to watching Japanese TV on our satellite dish, but I'll be damned if I can remember the names of them now.

The first two things I remember downloading because I heard the English versions on the International Channel was "Dreams Come True" by SES (well, durr, since so many of you seem to have heard that song, too) and "Simple and Clean" by Utada Hikaru (Hikki!). It wasn't long after that that I starting downloading Ayumi Hamasaki (a favorite), Do As Infinity (got to LURVE "Shinjitsu no Uta"), Smile Dk, Glay, Dir en Grey, Gackt, BoA, Every Little Thing, and my all-time favorite, Namie Amuro. I am simply in love with Amuro's "Come" right now. :d

My first J-Pop Song was Hikaru Utada too, which is why I'll always have a special place for her and her music in my heart...it wasn't First Love (though that song has an awesome piano melody). For me it was CAN YOU KEEP A SECRET. I was watching MTV2 while my friend surfed the net and T.a.T.u.'s video was winding down...next came Hikaru Utada and her futuristic CAN YOU KEEP A SECRET video. It was either "Just Communication" or something from Slayers, I'm not sure which. Well, it was the first I downloaded, anyway. Probably the first I ever remember hearing was something from Venus Wars.

"Hohoemi no Bakudan" (Smile Bomb) from Yu Yu Hakusho. Pretty darn catchy.

Mine was the Fushigi Yuugi Opening Theme song.
*sings* "Maigare Suzakuuu mi ra ku ru ra!!! Densetsuga ugokidashite. Hontou no watashi wa hirogaru.."

(sorry if there are any misspellings :d)

Ahhh Gackt <swoon> Now THAT is a good looking boy.

In any case, my first J-Pop song was "It's Gonna Rain" by Bonnie Pink. IT's a very good song, so if you haven't heard it or her, go for it. It's more upbeat pop than anything else, but I remember feeling really good listening to it.

Now, my beloved cousin Giselle was the one that brought my inner otaku to life, so it was kind of only natural that she would be the one to introduce me to the foreign, untranslated world of J-Pop. I don't understand Japanese but I like to think that the emotions and cool beat are above language barriers, so it's ok to be a loose fan.

I love that song, too! XD

Anyway, I believe my first J-Pop song was "Ashburn" - which is an EXCELLENT song - and I'm trying to figure out who the artist is. (A friend of mine sent it on a CD to me, so I have NO clue. :lol:) That song (and the friend) introduced me to the wide world of Japanese music. :3

My first song was also Ayumi Hamasaki, but it was "Evolution (Goldenscan Remix)". I had accidentally taken the wrong CD from my friend Joe and I played the first song on it, which was "Evolution", and I have been hooked since.

My first full anime cd was Larc~en~Ciel's REAL back in 2001.

That was the first anime song I've heard and loved. Jpop, though... that's tough, since it's been so long. I guess I'd have to say the same song.

I don't want to say "Just Communication" because it came from an anime.

I'd have to say my first ever was a song called "Invoke" by TM Revolution. Great song. Really energetic. Makes you wanna get up dance. ^_^

The first J-Pop song that I heard was Sakura Drops by Utada Hikaru. Since then, I have expanded my vocabulary to many other bands, but I especially enjoy her work. Mostly because she has such a pleasant singing voice. Also, I think it's cool that she can sing so well in both Japanese and English without either really sounding like fractured English/Japanese. To me, that's pretty impressive >>;

The first one I can actually name was, Real Face by KAT-TUN. I didn't really think much of it at the time, and I thought the boys weren't that good either. Time progressed however and I like both song and band much better now. Not to mention the rest of the JE stuff I listen too.

If my memory serves, the first Japanese song I've heard was the opening theme of Digimon 02 called 'Target' in 2003. That anime has pretty good music in the original version, actually.

Who would have guessed I'd move from anime music to J-Rock over time? ;)

Kesenai Tsumi, a definite! It's by the JPop artist, Nana Kitade. It was also the the first ending theme to Full Metal Alchemist. Also, a neat part of it is that the video has something to do with something that happened in the FMA series, but the video was made before FMA.

I also like 'Departure,' and 'Starless' from Rurouni Kenshin, but they are just piano solos.

It would have to be the music from Sailor Moon. I saw that while taking a few classes in KS. That was the first anime I saw back in the day on Toonami (back when they had the cute little blue robot). I was greatly uninformed of anime and such since I lived my HS years in a town of less than 2,000 people and cable was out of the question in such a small town. Some people had satellite but I have no idea how they got it. Forgive me for being grossly unmodern...

Let me see....as far as anime goes, I think it would have to be Last Impression, from Gundam Wing: Endless Waltz....
J-pop specifically would either have to be Addicted to you by Utada Hikaru :bow: , or Redemption, by Gackt (who bears an uncanny resemblance to Squall Leonhart...hmmmmmm...)

Love the voices.....
Everytime I hear Utada's voice I just wanna :jump:

"Ue o Muite Arukou" which I still love. *bought the CD, too*

One of the Sailor Moon movies for music from an anime, but for Japanese music, a friend of mine played me some crazy girl punk band. I don't remember who they were, but it was pretty awesome.
